

The Legal Intelligencer

From Golden Girls to Tracing Lincoln's Footsteps: How These Pa. Lawyers Survived the Bar Exam

Lizzy McLellan

06/30/2016

Tom Kline, Kline & Specter

The year was 1978. I accepted a clerkship with then-Justice Thomas Pomeroy of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. A condition of employment was that I started work early in the spring semester of law school, and that immediately upon graduation in June that I would continue employment, and work through the summer. I had little time to study, but I took my chances. I spent less than an hour a day studying for the bar, and actually relied on what I learned in law school. It's an anomaly, I know. That's my story, and I'm sticking to it.